Comment On Sports

By Pete Fritchie.

Washington.- Al Lopez, the manager of the American League's Chicago White Sox, is on his way to becoming Manager of the Year.

There is one big "if" — the Chicago White Sox must win the pennant. Lopez seems to have made the big winner move when he obtained Early Wynn, who came from the Cleveland Indians, and has won the big games for Chicago all year.

First and foremost, he is a Yankee-tamer, and this is something the Chicago White Sox have lacked in past years. Their erstwhile ace of the staff, Billy Pierce, has never been able to tame the Yankees consistently, and the White Sox have been scandalously weak in their encounters with the Yankees.

The League buzzed with speculation when Lopez let some top White Sox players go, in exchange for Early Wynn. For one thing, Wynn is about forty years old, and it could have been a blunder of the worst kind — had Wynn faded out of the picture, as most pitchers of age do.

However, Wynn did not fade out of the picture, and this year he has struck out more men than anybody in the American League—as this is written — and therefore the trade was solid gold.

Moreover, it is heartening to all those who are in advancing years to see a forty-year-old hurler like Wynn leading the League, and winning the big games, such as 2 - 1 triumphs over the Yankees, Wynn has also won the big games against the other clubs, as previously mentioned.

Of course, it is too early to say that the Chicago White Sox have the flag won. The Cleveland Indians could win it, and it is even conceivable that the New York Yankees could do so. This year, though, the Yankees seem to be finished, and unless they make a miraculous comeback, without the services of several key pitchers, they have practically no chance.

The Kansas City Athletics have made a remarkable spurt, beginning just after their manager, Harry Kraft, suffered a slight heart attack. This seemed to spur the Athletics on, and they compiled a winning string that shot them all the way into third place for awhile.

It appears to be between Chicago and Cleveland, with Chicago given a slight edge, on the basis of Al Lopez's experience and wisdom. It will be recalled that he is the only manager who has beaten out the Yankees in recent years, having done it a few years back with Cleveland. And if he does it again he is almost sure to be the Manager of the year. .

Homemakers Items

At first glance, buying potatoes doesn't seem too complicated a job.

But, says Donald Long, associate agricultural economist at V. P. I., buying potatoes, or any other food, in the modern grocery store, calls for some pretty fast thinking and figuring on the part of Mrs. Homemaker.

It takes time and energy to make a choice, Long says, not to mention being sure the choice is the best one.

There are thousands of items in the store. There are many different forms of each item. For instance, there are fresh potatoes, frozen potatoes, canned potatoes. There are French fries, puffs, salads, julienne etc.

Then there are quality differences. In some items quality differences are easy to spot. In others, especially in canned or frozen foods where the contents can't be seen, it is quite difficult to check the quality differences. Here it's the label story that is important.

A shoppers' quality guide found on some labels is the federal consumer grade. Taese grades, from the standpoint of the food shopper, are preferable to federal wholesale grades and can be a big help.

A grade label does not in itself mean that food is the best. It does, however, tell a great deal about quality. Generally, the different grades of a food are variations of quality within that food. Eggs are a good example, A U. S. Grade A egg is a top quality egg. A U. S. Grade B egg is more limited in its uses. It's good for scrambling, cooking, and for other uses where appearance is not important. No one would likely want to poach or fry it.

Nutritive value is similar regardless of grade, Long explains. Most of the difference is in appearance, tenderness, flavor, and amount of waste.

The use of federal consumer grades is voluntary, and as a result probably no more than one-fourth of the foods carry the U. S. grade label. Grades are most often found on meat (beef and lamb), eggs, poultry, dairy products, and some fruits and vegetables. The influence of grades is widespread, however, Long says.

SOIL CONSERVATION POSTAGE STAMP

Many commemorative postage stamps are issued to observe the anniversary of a noteworthy historic event or to honor a long-dead national hero.

The world's first soil conservation stamp, to be released on August 26, 1959, at Rapid City, S. D., celebrates no anniversary and honors no man.

Its issuance is, rather, a dramatic recognition by a grateful nation that American farmers and ranchers, and their government, are hard at work to protect and improve, for the benefit of all, a most valuable natural resource, the soil.

The Stamp portrays the beauty as well as the bounty that modern conservation farming brings to rural living. The city skiine on the horizon signifies at the same time that dwellers of skyscrapers also have a stake in soil conservation.

The stamp will be to them a symbol of assurance that a plentiful supply of food and other products of the land will continue to flow to the seven-eights of our people who live in town.

The stamp is a tribute to the countless farmers and ranchers who are demonstrating good soil stewardship. It is a salute to their locally organized soil conservation districts, and to the scientists, technicians and other agricultural workers of State and Federal Government who lend assistance.

Its design contains a reminder that soil conservation is an orderly combination of practices and land use that carefully relate water, grass, trees, livestock, wildlife, and other crops of the land.

NEWS FOR VETERANS

Veterans of any war or of service in the Korean-conflict period may apply for hospitalization through the nearest Veterans Administration Office, Carlton W. Bragg, Officer-in-Charge of the Lynchburg VA Office, said today. The general requirement is that the veteran's discharge or release from service must have been under conditions other than dishonorable. Bragg listed the three priorities for veterans seeking treatment in a VA hospital as follows:

1.- First priority goes to those needing to be hospitalized because of injuries or diseases incurred in or aggravated by line of duty in their active service during any war or the Korean-conflict period.

2.- Second priority goes to veterans with service during any war or the Korean-conflict period who were discharged or retired for disability that they incurred in line of duty, or who are receiving compensation payments for a service-connected disability. Included also, since January 1, 1959, are veterans who would be eligible to receive such compensation except for the fact that they are getting military retirement pay for service- connected disabilities, but who need hospital treatment for some ailment not connected with their service. These groups will be admitted under the second class of priority, according as beds may be available.

3. The third group consists of veterans with service during any war or the Korean-conflict period who were not discharged for disability and not having a compensable service-connected disability. Such veterans may be admitted to VA hospitals if the three following conditions are met: 1.- It is deemed medically necessary that they be hospitalized; 2.- they state under oath they are financially unable to pay hospital charges elsewhere, and, 3.- if VA hospital beds are available.

The Lynchburg VA Office is located in Room 317 of the Federal Building.

POSSIBLE REASONS CITED FOR LOW MILK PRODUCTION

The dairymen whose herd lags in milk production behind that of his neighbor can be hurt in both his pride and his pocketbook.

Dr. Norman R. Thompson, dairy scientist at VPI, says the question as to why one herd can out-produce another may not have a simple answer. Generally differences in milk production among dairy herds may be attributed to differences in breeding, feeding, and management. The relative importance of each is not easy to determine. However, research to date shows that breeding may account for only 10 to 20 per cent of the difference. This leaves feeding and management responsible for the remaining 80 to 90 per cent.

Dr. Thompson's advice, if your neighbor's herd consistently outproduces your herd, is to ask a few pointed questions.

What kind of sires are being used? Perhaps artificial breeding, making possible the use of top bulls, is the answer. Selection and culling, keeping only replacement heifers from high producing cows, is important. Get rid of the families of low producers.

Watch the feeding practices.

Plenty of green, leafy legume hay, and plenty of silage are needed to give cows the thousands of calories they need every day. Protein also is furnished by early cut hays and silages, and by some concentrates.

Do you do a good job of milking the herd? A good milking machine, kept in first class condition, and used properly, can help increase profits.

Cows should have about two month's vacation, or dry period, each year. And the herd should be kept healthy — free of mastitis and other diseases.

Health and Beauty

Most of us know that a good, crisp healthy head of lettuse is a storehouse of many essential mineral salts, which includes organized calcium, iron, magnesium, potassium, sodium and magnanese. Also silicon, iodine, sulphur, phosphorus and chlorine.

Silicon, with sulphur, feeds the hair and makes it grow, many tell us. Together with chlorine, silicon preserves the enamel of the teeth. The silicon in the skin acts as an insulation, keeping the body heat inside.

Our finger nails and toe nails need silicon and sulphur for health. Finger nails are a good indication of a person's state of health. When the nails are rough, furrowed or wrinkled, there is mineral stravation.

Try to include raw onions in your daily diet. Onions promote the nourishment of the vital centers. They are rich in calcium, iodine, and sulphur. All these chemicals help give us red-blooded enthusiasm.

Onions also help eliminate acids and toxins in the system, and have long been used in the treatment of colds. Nervous people should definately try eating raw onions.

Lately there has been a great deal written and said about the apple cider vinegar being a natural health food. In fact, a popular health drink with many people is two teaspoonful of apple cider vinegar in a medium glass of water with two teaspoonsful of honey. Stir thoroughly and sip slowly.

About The Home

By Frances Dell

Air-conditioning may cool the hot summer air and make life worth living, but it does stir up some heated decorating problems when a central unit is impossible to install and one must have individual units.

It is desirable to have the installation arrangement suit year round formal or informal decor.

The easy way out is to use drapes to hide the unit during the winter months, and open them during the summer months. This is not always possible in modern living, and dining rooms where a great deal of glass window space is usually found.

For these rooms you may work out something quite effective on your own. However, a suggestion is in order. You could place poles or rods with suction cups in front of part or all of the window wall. The cups hold the rods in place between the floor and ceiling. Fit fabric squares in pole grooves or tuck them in place. The squares may be sewn together to fill in the entire openings between the poles.

A second version would be to leave empty spaces between the fabric squares, creating an interesting design.

The textiles should be of one color, and if a pattern is wanted, use mixed textures. Translucent fabric is desirable, so that it does not hinder the flow of air from the air-conditioner behind the fabric screen.

A window containing an air-conditioner may also be covered from top to bottom by pull-up bamboo or wood slat shades.

The fall shoe collections all feature the narrow toe. This is good news to most of us for two reasons. One — women like the flattering effect of the long, slender toe, and we have a sizeable investment in this style shoe and would hate for them to suddenly become dated.

The new last for fall is called the Gazelle last. It is extremely graceful and flattering to the foot, with a narrow toe, and is sharply ridged up the center of the vamp, giving a pince-nez effect. Most shoes with this new look are closed, and have tall, slender heels.

Daytime shoes in calf and alligator have simple dressmaker details in the same, or blending leather shade.

Evening shoes are extravagant, and include antique satins, brocades and cut velvets. A Toreador evening pump or a small-shaped heel has gold beads, pearls, and brilliants on tulle over gold satin. Some high-heeled while satin pumps are trimmed with colored ribbons and small roses. Other embroidered satins feature bright feather trim, at the throat of the vamp.

Walking shoes have medium or low heels and flat, slightly squared toes. The leathers most often seen are alligator, calf, and brushed suedes.
